

Columbia High School students in Roger Lizotte's Criminal Justice class have created a new way to help teach younger students about safety...by using puppets. With the help of a Learn & Serve mini-grant, Lizotte and his students were able to plan, script, and create a safety-preparedness puppet show to present to elementary schools in the area. Students in Mrs. Lizotte's second grade class and Mrs. Odom's kindergarten class at Summers Elementary were able to enjoy the show which covered safety subjects such as being careful, what to do in the case of a fire, listening to instructions, and not talking to strangers. All aspects of the show, from stage direction to sound systems to the actual puppetry, were planned and carried out by Lizotte's students.
